Greetings from MJF

In Bangladesh many registered non-government organizations are working on different issues such as human rights, good governance, violence against women, health, education, migration, poverty reduction etc. One of the major challenges these organizations face is non-accessibility to required information or data. The RTI Act 2009 can be a useful tool and mechanism to get access to these information which will result in more efficiency within their organization and impact for their work. The beneficiaries under different programs can also be motivated for seeking information from different authorities. Many partners of MJF have already started using RTI to seek information from authorities as a response irregularities that occur in government-led social safety net programs as well as other services. The beneficiaries of those organizations are seeking information related to their livelihoods. We have instances where a cheated person was able to get the required documents to seek redress or a villager could question about the quality of a construction work.

Recently RACINE, a partner organization of MJF, used RTI Act in assessing the government-led 40-day Employment Generation Program for the extreme poor. In this context it is also felt that issue of right to information has to be integrated in the core programs.

Many organizations work beyond a particular theme. Rather, they work in multiple areas. Working exclusively on RTI might be challenging for an organization due to shortage of fund or manpower. RTI as a crosscutting theme can be effective in such context. For integrating RTI in different programs it is important to first orient organization staff. RTI related workshops or orientation meetings could be arranged. Staff representing different themes will thus be able to apply RTI in their respective fields. The coverage would be the maximum if such initiatives are undertaken. However, RTI should not only be used for seeking information related to livelihood issues. RTI can be used effectively to ensure good governance and to challenge authorities where instances of bad governance occurs. It is a mechanism for ordinary citizens to establish their citizen's rights and monitor public expenditure. We hope with time the use of RTI in Bangladesh will reach that stage.

The use of RTI Act, 2009 ensures the entitlements of the poor

Adivasi people across the country are struggling for their rights. They are getting united in different regions of the country and Mymensingh is not an exception in this regard. The Adivasi people of Bhaluka upazila, Mymensingh have formed Union Based Adivasi Land Mortgage Forums (UBALMF) across 6 unions. All among the 203 Forum members suffer from land related problems. There has been a committee in the upazila named Advocacy Networking and Lobby Committee (ANLC) which works on advocacy, networking and linkage with government and non-government organizations. However, the Forum members are attached to the ANLC. ANLC shared RTI ACT, 2009 with the Forum members and thus they (the Forum members) explored existing scopes in it for availing their entitlements.

Toronikonto is the Chairman of Mollikbari-I Forum submitted 6 applications under RTI Act to the Union Parishad of Mollikbari Union on 08.06.2011. He got support from ANLC and LRD in filling-up and submission process. All his information requests were made on the allocations of Union Parishad. The Chairman was changed and he failed to get the information. Toronikonto shared this in ANLC meeting. It was decided in the meeting to go for information requests again on the same issues. Toronikonto applied for information on 12.09.2011. The Forum members communicated with the UP regarding the submitted requests and demanded the information. Sarwar Jahan Emran, the newly elected UP Chairman discussed with the Forum members. Finally Toronikonto received the sought information. The consequence of using RTI was not ended only in having information. Rather, the UP Chairman asked the Forum members to prepare a short list of potential beneficiaries for the upcoming safety net programs. The members of Mollikbari-I Union Based Adivasi Land Mortgage Forum prepared the short list accordingly and submitted that to the UP Chairman. Thus 6 families were selected for VGF cards, 3 women for Widow Allowances and 2 persons for Disable Allowances.

This seems to be a great achievement of the Forum when they are struggling for the entitlements. They believe RTI Act, 2009 is Act which can serve the poorest of the poor. Now they are more eager to use this Act in different areas related to their lives.
