

Call for application Investigative Journalism Partnership

MRDI and Fojo Media Institute invite interested media houses and group of independent journalists to apply for the Investigative Journalism Partnership (IJP). The call is open to all and applicable around the year. It supports media houses and groups of journalists to pursue unique investigative ideas that they think is challenging with existing knowledge and resources.

Media houses with a proven track record of publishing quality journalism that have access to publishing platforms reaching a reasonably large audience in Bangladesh, can apply for support in IJP. Group of journalists with commitment to investigative journalism, are also encouraged to apply.

This programme is dedicated to improve the scope and quality of investigative reporting in Bangladesh. It is an initiative of MRDI and Fojo Media Institute, Linnaeus University, Sweden under the project 'Improving Qualitative Journalism in Bangladesh'.

IJP is the core program of the project, where media houses and group of journalists come up with new investigative ideas. The project supports applicants with training, expert mentoring and resources to implement those ideas.

It is an approach to build capacity of investigative reporting, while working on particular stories or special area of journalism. Each partnership has a time frame of 6 months to complete the reporting project.

Applicants are required to assure that stories produced under the IJP will be published. Application form and details of the IJP programme are available for download at MRDI website (www.mrdibd.org/ijp.php).

IJP is competitive and it does not guarantee all applications will be granted for partnership. A Fojo-MRDI team will review the applications based on uniqueness, scope and relevance of the journalism idea. We encourage gender inclusiveness in proposed teams.
