

Prolonged exposure to salinity is causing women in Bangladesh's coastal region of Satkhira to develop infectious diseases and in drastic cases, lose their wombs through surgery. In the highly vulnerable area, drinking water is scarcely available and priced beyond the means of the average local resident.